Oberlander Prize Forum - Courageous by Design: How Landscape Architects Are Confronting the Climate Crisis in New York City

Cornelia Hahn Oberlander is the namesake of the new International Landscape Architecture Prize, which was conceived by The Cultural Landscape Foundation (TCLF) to honor designers who, like Oberlander, are “exceptionally talented, creative, courageous, and visionary.” Addressing climate change has been a core focus of Oberlander’s practice for more than 30 years, and the symposium will serve as the inaugural Oberlander Prize Forum, the first of many fora to be developed in association with the newly established Oberlander Prize.

Organized and presented by The Cultural Landscape Foundation (TCLF), this one-day symposium will focus on New York City just as the city’s Department of City Planning is actively engaging with communities throughout the five boroughs to advance their own zoning and land use strategies in an effort to “reduce flood risks and support the city’s vitality and resiliency through long-term adaptive planning.”

The symposium will feature leading women landscape architects who are creative and courageous professionals working in the city and beyond. These practitioners are inventing and deploying new tools, techniques, and technologies to meet the challenges of the current climate crisis.

A reception the evening prior will offer speakers and attendees a chance to mingle and initiate conversations about the day ahead.
